NEW QUESTION: 3

In a traditional ERP system, the receipt of a customer order may result in:

- I. Customer tracking of the order's progress
- II. Automatic replenishment of inventory by a supplier
- III. Hiring or reassigning of employees
- IV. Automatic adjustment of output schedules

- A. I, II, III, and IV.
- B. I, II, and IV only.
- C. III and IV only.
- D. I and III only.

Answer: C

Explanation:

The traditional ERP system is one in which subsystems share data and coordinate their activities. Thus, if marketing receives an order, it can quickly verify that inventory is sufficient to notify shipping to process the order. Otherwise, production is notified to manufacture more of the product, with a consequent automatic adjustment of output schedules. If materials are inadequate for this purpose, the system will issue a purchase order. If more labor is needed, human resources will be instructed to reassign or hire employees. However, the subsystems in a traditional ERP system are internal to the organization. Hence, they are, often called back-office functions. The information produced is principally (but not exclusively) intended for internal use by the organization's managers. The current generation of ERP software (ERP II) has added front-office functions. Consequently, ERP II, but not traditional ERP, is capable of customer tracking of the order's progress and automatic replenishment of inventory by a supplier.
